Example Input : root(5) [12,25,34,15,50] Output : true Input : root(5) [12,25,34,15,50] Output : false I have implemented the algorithm as follows: Construct a new tree containing all the input elements, Visit each leaf in the binary tree, and recursively call the function recursively(newTree, currentElement, char) void recursive(TNode* root, TNode* currentElement, char currentChar) { if (currentChar == 'L' && currentElement == root) { return true; } else if (currentChar == 'S' && currentElement == root) { return false; } return recursive(root->left, currentElement, currentChar) && recursive(root->right, currentElement, currentChar); } I have tested this algorithm on many test cases and it takes a really long time. I was wondering if there is a simple solution for this problem using O(nlogn). NOTE: String "LS" should be stored as an array of characters of length 2, all starting with 'L' and 'S' respectively. A: All you are missing is node traversal. void recursive(TNode* root, TNode* currentElement)
