Is there a way to copy and paste all of these lines to a text document, and run them automatically? I have ran some of them, but it seems that many of them are just too different. I have used some of these commands: `paste -d\ -s -w output.txt` `copy output.txt` `pastebinit output.txt` The problems I have run into is that the commands don't seem to work properly when replacing variables (e.g: using "echo". I would like to avoid this, because it would take too long, but would appreciate a solution. Thanks in advance.

A: You could use a simple bash script to do the job. It opens the output.txt file, reads it line by line, breaks it into several lines (here we use `&&` so that if a line is empty it is not processed), and then uses paste command to paste the whole output.txt file in a new file output2.txt. #!/bin/bash # Open output.txt file and read it line by line while IFS= read -r -d $' ' line; do # Make a new line (here we use "${line}") newline="${line}${line}" # Split the new line into several lines newline_array=($newline) # Use paste command to paste all the lines in output2.txt file. paste -d" " -s -w output2.txt "${newline_array[@]}" done Continental Canam Pty Ltd Our online services are generally available between 8am - e79caf774b
