BASKETBALL: Shenendehowa edges Mohawk Valley Shenendehowa rose to 7-4 with its first win over the season when it beat Mohawk Valley, 74-66, Tuesday. The Longhorns led 16-4 after the first quarter and held off Mohawk Valley's comeback to claim the win, which came in front of 2,197 at the Poughkeepsie-Elmore Fieldhouse. "We've got a lot of new guys out there," said Shenendehowa head coach Gary Colombo. "But the guys who are making the most of their minutes are having fun, which is great." The Longhorns only shot 6-of-22 from the field (27 percent).
Colombo said the key to the victory was taking care of the ball, especially in the first half. "We played a little too fast," he said. "Defensively we need to play a little more in control. We have to make decisions and be aggressive." The Longhorns also needed to play more soundly on the boards, as they went 16-of-46 (34 percent). In an effort to shore up its rebounding, Colombo rotated his players out on the court. Shenendehowa had five players score in double figures, led by the four Tyler Berns, who scored 14 points, and Steven Brennan, who finished with 13. Berns and Brennan each shot 5-of-6 from the field. "We missed some shots in the first half," said Berns. "In the second half, we came together as a unit." The victory snapped a six-game losing streak for Shenendehowa. The Longhorns had suffered losses to Starrett and Burlington. "We lost on the road and it was tough," said Colombo. "But we came out with a win. It's encouraging to get a win under our belt after a tough schedule 0cc13bf012

Bilateral discrete-time recurrent neural network model for insulin and glucagon secretion. The posterior pituitary hormones, insulin and glucagon, maintain the homeostasis of blood glucose. They are secreted in a pulsatile fashion, but the exact mechanism of insulin and glucagon secretion are still unclear. In this work, a discrete-time recurrent neural network model of insulin and glucagon secretion is developed in which the first-order discrete-time transfer functions of the time delay units and the excitatory and inhibitory feedback units are used in order to understand the role of these units in the neural pulse trains. The model successfully reproduces the insulin and glucagon secretion profiles of isolated islets and is then extended to analyze the experiments in which the islets are perfused with varying concentrations of glucose. The model explains the inhibitory role of low glucose on the secretion of insulin and glucagon as well as the different effects of low glucose on the rates of insulin and glucagon secretion. The inherent damping behavior in the feedback units is also shown to be responsible for the delayed response of insulin and glucagon secretion to the glucose pulses. Involvement of toll-like receptor-4 in the phosphorylation of epidermal growth factor receptor and JAK-2/STAT-3 in Penaeus vannamei after white spot syndrome virus infection. Penaeus vannamei (P. vannamei) is one of the most economically important crustaceans in the world, yet little is known about its response to viral infection. In this study, the P. vannamei toll-like receptor-4 (LvTLR4) gene was cloned from the cDNA library prepared from P. vannamei hemocytes. LvTLR4 was highly conserved in the Toll/TLR family, and consisted of 1618 bp with an ORF of 1497 bp and predicted protein of 501 amino acids. Gene expression analysis of LvTLR4 was found to be up-regulated after white spot syndrome virus (WSSV) infection. To further investigate the function of LvTLR4 in virus infection, P. vannamei hemocytes were trans
