at the Cannes Film Festival on Thursday that he will star in Tarantino's eighth film as a World War II-era German officer on a mission to take down a Nazi war criminal. Asked whether he had read the script of the film that Tarantino is shooting in March, the actor — who won the best actor Oscar for Tarantino's 2004 film "Inglourious Basterds" — responded, "Yes." Tarantino reportedly had read Waltz's script and the two spent time together before the Cannes Film Festival to discuss the plans for the film. Waltz said he has a "very personal relationship" with Tarantino and thinks he's one of the "most talented filmmakers in the world." Waltz said he has known Tarantino for some time and, like many of the actor's other collaborators on the 2008 Quentin Tarantino film "Inglourious Basterds," he chose to work with the filmmaker because he felt there was a strong chance he could finally get his actor's Oscar. "I want to be in a Tarantino film no matter what the script is," he added. Tarantino is shooting "Django Unchained" in Prague and was only recently granted access to the unfinished Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film studio in the Czech capital. The shoot is slated to last six to eight weeks. The film is set around Christmas in 1858 and follows the fierce bond that develops between a slave, Django, played by Jamie Foxx, and a German-born slave-turned-bounty hunter, Dr. King Schultz (Waltz). Django

1989 American romantic comedy film directed by George Schaefer and starring Goldie Hawn and Alan Arkin. The screenplay by Larry Gelbart and Mark Cohen is loosely based on the eponymous 1952 novel of the same name by Samuel Shellabarger. Plot In the late 1940s, after graduation from Cornell University, a young man named Mark Porter is immediately and brutally rejected by every girl he dates. His only consolation is his relationship with his best friend Harry, a former fraternity brother and basketball star. Mark remains as stoic and undamaged as a statue, while his friend is another story. Though Harry had been the "ladies man" at Cornell, his heart is now set on a fellow graduate student named Evelyn. The high jinx of her having been two years ahead of them means Harry will lose her unless he can pull off some big romantic gesture within a short amount of time.
Now Harry is out to change his life by seizing the last day of an impromptu road trip. He has hired Mark to help out, as he does not know how to drive. A marriage proposal in the middle of nowhere is a challenge no matter who is proposing. Of course, Harry can do nothing that might convince Evelyn that he is the man for her, while Mark can barely act at all. A Decent Man is a romantic comedy, with a supporting role for a pair of former supporting actors, Kristy McNichol and John Ritter. Other background characters include the show-business columnist Hedda Hopper and the ballerina/politician, Eleanor Roosevelt. Cast Goldie Hawn as Herself Alan Arkin as Himself Kristy
