The evidence, however, must indicate that the defendant was in possession of the seized property, "and not merely a possessor of stolen goods..." Id. at 1382 (quoting United States v. Bacon, 646 F.2d 202, 204 (3d Cir.1981)). " 'Possession' in such a case could simply mean 'knowledge' coupled with 'dominion and control' over the property." Id. at 1382 (quoting United States v. Biography Colajanni was born in Reggio

Calabria in 1888, the son of a lawyer and patrician. In 1906 he graduated from the University of Naples with a law degree. During World War I he joined the National Fascist Party, and by 1930 he had become a member of the Fasci Italiani di Combattimento. In 1931 he became a member of the Italian Chamber of Deputies, and he remained in office for twelve years, with a three-year break in 1938-1940, when he was Minister of Public Works and the General Commander of the Italian Army Corps in Albania. In 1946 he was elected to the Constituent Assembly and was re-elected in 1948. He helped draft the Italian Constitution of the Republic. He was elected to the Chamber of Deputies in 1948 and served there for the next twenty-five years, becoming a deputy for Calabria in 1952. In 1954 Colajanni was chosen to be President of the Constituent Assembly of the Italian Republic. However, on August 8, 1955 he resigned from his position, on the grounds that he lacked the official qualifications, since he had not been re-elected to the Chamber of Deputies in 1952. This was done because the Communist Party refused to elect him and voted for a candidate, Pietro Nenni. This incident had a bearing on the history of the Cold War, since Colajanni was a member of the Christian Democratic Party, which was ideologically aligned with the West. The real reason Colajanni resigned was that he had become acutely ill with leukemia and had decided to retire from politics. Colajanni was
