Good Vibes Volume 4 by Matt Ferguson (Adobe Audition and Photoshop) - 11. Upgrade and upgrade all my NI (Kontakt, Omnisphere, etc) libraries to the latest free version. IBM's Watson Chills Out Deep Learning Tools and Closes the AI Gap - brendanovak ===== aurelian What I find most interesting is that for all the hype around AI, virtually none of the common applications have been built from scratch using only deep/probabilistic learning techniques. For example, word embeddings and their applications are prime examples. ImageNet, sequence tagging (aka NLP), maybe a couple of other applications come to mind. The reason why this doesn't happen is that the application domain makes use of a technique, at least by the AI researcher community, but is well-known in the research community as being non-optimal (e.g. word embeddings, sequence tagging). The text for comparison would be "actually build a deep learning system for every application domain". ----- splittingTimes The problem is these people are trying to make AI general intelligence. Most people are content to automate mundane tasks. Let's be honest, who wants a personal assistant or an even better self-driving car? If that's your main goal, you are going to do something different. I think the real applications of AI is going to come in in medicine, security, and finance. I see the real possibility of machines becoming "better" than humans at these tasks. In finance, I think they will go directly from hacking debt market into the derivatives market. Imagine a system exploiting margin calls against poor traders. It will be brilliant at it. I don't know about the rest, but right now I don't expect a robot to be able to do what a human can do, barring the computers remaining better at calculation and memory, and not all of them are. ----- minimax7 > I think the real applications of AI is going to come in in medicine
