We report here the development of a new automated yeast-two-hybrid (Y2H) assay, which allows rapid screening of tens of thousands of yeast clones in parallel using only small amounts of starting material. Our Y2H method employs ligation-mediated PCR (LM-PCR), in which the amplified cDNA is used as a template for LM-PCR, allowing specificity for different DNA sequences. We assessed the reliability of the new method by performing three independent experiments with random yeast colonies; all of the colonies had the correct interactions. We tested this method by screening for interactions between the p53 transcription factor and potential partners, followed by a confirmation by manual screening of the library. A similar screen for novel interactions between Drosophila heat-shock proteins 70 and 70A was performed as a control. and a claim against either of them, and that he became a third party beneficiary of the contract.
