real steel (2011) i have to agree with a lot of those comments above that are saying it should have been released in the summer and be better. i think they could have done a better job making this version of the movie appear to be more "realistic" than the original. i know it's a movie that is supposed to be "real", but it's still not real enough imo. i just wish that the makers of the movie would have included more gritty realism and not used stupid fight sequences. that's just what i've come to expect from a movie like this. with that being said, i still intend to see it when it comes out. the cast of this show, as well as the overall visual style of the show, came together really well. everything is so well thought-out and polished. it has such a unique look, that has yet to be surpassed by any other show on any other streaming service. you will definitely see that when you watch the show. its not a perfect show, by any means, but its certainly different enough that its worth checking out, especially if youre a big fan of science fiction or action movies. if you feel like you shouldnt watch a show with a dancing bear in it, thats just your problem. i love it. the cogs of the setting are really well done, you can imagine that the main character would have to put a lot of thought and care into even the smallest thing, and it shows. the show has a lot of attention to detail and each setting is well crafted. a fun sci-fi show with plenty of effects and action. the adult comedy is fun in all the right places. binge-watching is a fine way to kill time. the clown moments are acceptable and funny. the children voices are good. the technology is fun. the overall experience is entertaining. there are definitely some issues, but the chemistry between the lead actors is enough to keep the show entertaining. the first season will be a delight for fans of adult sci-fi comedies.

my workflow is thus 1. make a to do pile, its a combination of recommendations, stuff ive been enjoying myself, stuff i want to rewatch. i try to keep a mix of styles.genres/directors and dps so i dont get bored while working. 2. i watch through the movies on vlc, usually between 3x and 4x speed while listening to podcasts, grabbing any frame that interests me. depending on mood i could spend a few hours just doing the grabbing 3. this usually leaves me with around 200-250 frames per film. so the next step is to edit, usually there might be a week or 2 between the first grab and this edit stage. i view all the frames as a slideshow and i remove any frame that there are doubles of (someone might be blinking in first frame and normal in second) or remove any that seem less interesting this time around. 4. im then left with usually around 80-100 really interesting frames. real steel is the first computer game based on a hollywood blockbuster. in order to pull off a near-impossible sequence, you'll have to use your wits, strength, and strategy to avoid the dangers of the metal world. you know, i love a good post-apocalyptic story, but i can't remember the last time i've seen one. still, i was intrigued by this film because it looked like it could be a really fun one. i was impressed when the trailer came out and the story was certainly intriguing. unfortunately, i found the film to be pretty boring, and there weren't really any interesting characters. real steel is an upcoming american science fiction film directed by shawn levy, and based on the 2000 film of the same name. it stars dwayne "the rock" johnson and kevin bacon, with helen hunt, evangeline lilly, and jon hamm also starring. 5ec8ef588b
